

Credibility_Score: 7.867

- Filler words: [analysis]

The data reveals a moderate use of filler words by the speaker, Rowly Hirst. Phrases such as "you know," "like," "umm," and "yeah" are recurrent throughout the conversation. These filler words indicate moments of hesitation or thought collection, which can detract from the perceived confidence and preparedness of the speaker.

- Passion: [analysis]

Rowly Hirst demonstrates a clear passion for the subject matter, as evidenced by his enthusiastic tone and the use of emphatic language such as "mind blowing," "amazing," and "exciting." His focus on the transformative potential of the product and its impact on various industries conveys a strong belief in its value.

- Thumbs Up/down feedback: [analysis]

There is no explicit thumbs up/down feedback provided in the data, so this factor cannot be analyzed.

- Direct Feedback: [analysis]

Direct feedback from the audience is not present in the data, so this factor cannot be analyzed.

- Credibility References: [Provide one noticeable and credibility related reference/quote from the transcript]

One noticeable reference related to credibility is Rowly Hirst's comment on the potential of the product and its market opportunity: "Like I think what you gotta keep in mind is that if you think about relate not Sandy like what it does, there's no one who has linked AI behind that kind of different structure where in terms of what what will our focus on meetings is yeah that this unique platform that you can only replicate with a patchwork of software which is you know if you think about the lifetime of meeting you don't zoom in to does the event management software up front yeah and." This quote reflects his confidence in the uniqueness and competitive advantage of the product.